The Story of Three Feathers Adams

Nisto Mekwana, also known as Three Feathers Adams, was born in 1873 on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota. As a young boy, he showed a remarkable talent for art, sketching scenes from his everyday life on scraps of paper and animal hides.

At the age of 15, Three Feathers Adams was sent to the Carlisle Indian Industrial School in Pennsylvania, where he studied art under renowned artist Angel De Cora. De Cora recognized Three Feathers Adams' talent and encouraged him to pursue his artistic aspirations.

After graduating from Carlisle, Three Feathers Adams returned to the Pine Ridge Reservation, where he began to develop his own unique style of painting. He drew inspiration from Lakota culture, incorporating traditional symbols and motifs into his work. His paintings depicted scenes of everyday life, ceremonies, and historical events.

Three Feathers Adams' work gained recognition beyond the reservation, and he soon began to exhibit his paintings at galleries and museums across the country. He was one of the first Native American artists to achieve national prominence.

In addition to painting, Three Feathers Adams was also an accomplished muralist and sculptor. He created large-scale murals for public buildings and institutions, depicting scenes from Native American history and culture. He also carved intricate sculptures out of wood and stone.

Three Feathers Adams' legacy as an artist continues to inspire generations of Native American artists. His work has been exhibited in major museums around the world, and his paintings are highly sought-after by collectors.
